A Dialogue Between Mr. Z and Mr. &, Massachusetts Centinel, 31 October 1787

Mr. Russell, The following SINGULAR DIALOGUE, between two anti-federalists, Mr. Z. and Mr. &. was overheard from a chamber-window not a hundred miles from the State-House, one evening this week—you will please to hand it to the publick for the entertainment of the curious—and oblige yours, Detector.

Mr. 7.

Enough of that subject for the present.—How do you like the Federal Constitution? Mr. & . You have an easy answer to that question—you know that it comes diametrically across all my plans, and if it should take effect, my prospects will be entirely blasted, judge therefore if it can receive my approbation.

Mr. Z. Well, I am glad to find your sentiments agree with mine—and the question now is, how we shall counteract the measures of those who are sticklers for what they call an efficient Federal Government, so as to frustrate their expectations?

Mr. & . Yes, that is the question—and for my part I am pretty well determined what methods to pursue.—You know the people of this commonwealth are tinctured with a strong proportion of JEALOUSY—this principle then, must be our FORTE—In all circles, by all means, in publick and in private, by letters, correspondencies, in print, and out of print, let us be careful to extol this FIRST OF VIRTUES in a REPUBLICK. Let us disseminate surmises, suspicions and inuendoes, let no characters escape our animadvertions, let us suspect the motives, views and designs, of the members of the late Continental Convention—let us blow up that scare-crow bubble ARISTOCRACY—let our fears of a STANDING ARMY be dark and gloomy—let us terrify the imaginations of the weak and credulous, with horrid ideas of tax-gatherers and soldiers at their heels—let us decry imposts and excises, as the appendages of tyranny—let us infuse into the minds of the disaffected that the plan is to pay the national debt, pound for pound—to cut us off from all suspension and tender laws, from any relief by BANKRUPT ACTS, and by this means enabling their rapacious creditors to take poor debtors by the throat—let us inflame the honest and unsuspecting Farmer, Tradesman and Mechanick with ideas that there is a combination among the rich, to stifle all free debate upon the great subject of the AMERICAN CONSTITUTION, and that the PRINTERS are leagued to suppress all publications against it; and though the STATE GOVERNMENT is an object of our detestation, and we have exerted ourselves to the utmost to subvert it, and introduce a GLORIOUS ANARCHY—let us conjure up every apprehension of its falling a sacrifice to the Federal Government—let us damn this government as an elective monarchy, aristocracy, and cursed tyrannical system.—By THESE MEANS we shall throw such stumbling-blocks in the way of your federal men—we shall so bewilder and puzzle the people, that they never will agree to any thing, and if confusion and bloodshed insues, so much the better—we shall stand the best chance, having anticipated such scenes, and taken OUR MEASURES accordingly.

Mr. Z. I find you have not been idle; your imagination is really fruitful, and I think with you that JEALOUSY is our grand resort—this principle has wrought wonders already—It was JEALOUSY that prevented granting adequate powers to Congress, some years ago this principle in our good friends of Rhode-Island has been the prime cause of ruining the publick credit, and enabling the people to pay taxes at a depreciated rate—this principle properly worked up, has brought so many of our good friends into publick life in the above government, and enabled the poor distressed debtors there, to pay off their debts without any difficulty2—this principle will keep out every man of property, wisdom and learning from every post in government—and if now duly cultivated, will effectually defeat this FEDERAL SYSTEM—FOR ALTHOUGH IT IS NEXT TO A MIRACLE THAT THE CONVENTION HAVE AGREED UPON A SYSTEM OF GOVERNMENT FOR A PEOPLE SO DIVERSIFIED IN MANNERS AND HABITS—and although it is morally impossible for them ever to coalesce under any continental plan, should this fall through, yet that GLORIOUS PRINCIPLE, JEALOUSY, the never-failing resort of the factious and enterprizing, may turn even these considerations to its advantage.—This WONDERFUL UNANIMITY may be construed into an ARISTOCRATICAL COMBINATION, and the TERRIBLE CONSEQUENCES that would result, from a rejection of the federal system, may be explained away, as the idle predictions of self interested, aristocratical partizans.

Mr. & . We certainly have hit upon the only successful game that can be played; and if we do but manage our cards dexterously, we may yet give the COUP DE GRACE to this plan, and if by any means this can be effected, the present calm may be prolonged, and we shall continue to retain our consequence, without fear of sheriffs, attachments or creditors.

Mr. Z. There are yet some difficulties that remain, such as these, to persuade the people to believe us, to keep them from suspecting US in the storm of JEALOUSY that we may raise, and to make them believe that all the miseries they suffer do not proceed from the want of a Federal Government.

Mr. & . Why I acknowledge this is the toughest part of our business—however, perseverance can do wonders—we must ponder upon the subject—I will see you again, when we may be able to enlarge our plan of operation.—Interim, adieu.

Cite as: The Documentary History of the Ratification of the Constitution Digital Edition, ed. John P. Kaminski, Gaspare J. Saladino, Richard Leffler, Charles H. Schoenleber and Margaret A. Hogan. Charlottesville: University of Virginia Press, 2009.

Canonic URL: http://rotunda.upress.virginia.edu/founders/RNCN-02-04-02-0003-0018 [accessed 06 Jan 2011]

Original source: Ratification by the States, Volume IV: Massachusetts, No. 1